To whom it may concern,

Consider this to be my letter of recommendation for Gabriel Costa written from the perspective of the time we worked together at ExxonMobil in 2026. I have been the product management analyst for the Americas region of Hydrocarbon Fluids, a business that has contributed over $200 million of earnings to the corporation, and Gabriel was a critical asset in overcoming specific challenges for us in 2026. When the Strait of Hormuz shutdown in March, our business feed costs were dramatically impacted and increased faster than at any other time in history. This dynamic market disrupted many of our background processes and systems that were built for more stable environments. Manual overrides that would normally be required 3 or 4 times per year were now appearing dozens of times per day, requiring up to two hours of my time dedicated to resolution each day. I reached out to our normal sales enablement team to help me troubleshoot a way to speed up the manual process, but nobody was capable of figuring out an improvement, until I was introduced to Gabriel.

Gabriel immediately showed an impressive responsiveness and general interest in helping that set him apart from his peers. He spent time with me to understand the issue and its cost implications before quickly building a macro-enabled spreadsheet tool to unlock major efficiencies for our team. Gabriel showed persistence when troubleshooting the tool as each turn in the Iran war led to different SAP scenarios that needed to be captured under the umbrella of his tool. He showed creativity and a fundamental understanding of complex systems by ultimately delivering a simple tool that covered all use cases. His tool allowed me to go from manually releasing orders one at a time to releasing entire batches within seconds, saving literally 1-2 hours per day of my work time.

I would be glad to have Gabriel as a team member for any future endeavor after seeing his aptitude, persistence and skill firsthand and I'm sure you will be glad to see the impact he can make for your team.

Sincerely,

Scott Haltom
